BOOTH #B29

Dio Horia Gallery is pleased to return to Untitled Art, with a group presentation of new works by Chris Akordalitis, Pablo Benzo, Maja Djordjevic, Amir H. Fallah, Stelios Karamanolis, Christophoros Kraniotis, Ally Rosenberg and Aleksandar Todorovic, created especially for Untitled Art 2022.

'Raising the Bar' involves a booth of mixed media works by eight artists looking into the zeitgeist of contemporary art's visual art ecosystem. In our globally influenced, culturally diverse, and technologically advancing world, the contemporary artists participating in Dio Horia's stand touch on various issues, such as female empowerment, human evolution, utopia and metaphysics, with a view to giving voice to the varied and ever-evolving cultural landscape of diverse identities, values, and beliefs, bringing together a number of major works. What is more, the gallery puts purposefully forward the expression and practices of minority artists, further promoting the development and exhibition of their work, in a most effective, yet previously unattainable way, as all but one of the artists come from small peripheral countries, namely Greece, Cyprus, Serbia, Iran and Chile.

Mapping our #B29 Untitled Art booth, on the main wall there is a thoroughly envisioned large-scale triptych by Serbia-born Maja Djordjevic that is her most ambitious work to date. Illustrating a celebratory event in bold colors that makes use of the artist's signature 'computer pixels' technique, 'Our Victory' comments on a contemporary 'Society of the Spectacle', where commodities rule both workers and consumers, instead of being at their disposal, criticizing consumer culture and commodity fetishism.

Along the same lines, the inner left, painted-green wall of the booth presents an immersive wall installation by Chris Akordalitis, composed of one ceramic piece, as well as three larger oil paintings on canvas. The Cypriot artist's compositions address a primal desire to escape the western world and spend time in nature, away from commodified objects, in order to achieve mindfulness, and be able to finally engage and create personal moments of simple pleasure.

On the opposite, painted-blue wall, two emerging Greek artists showcase their work for the first time in the US. Stelios Karamanolis' 'Untitled' works are subtle compositions abounding with symbols, with bright acrylic colors defining mystical circular motifs and geometrical spaces, further accentuated by color pencil lines, like fragments of history and moments in the world. On the other hand, Christophoros Kraniotis' 'Shishimai lion dancer', 'Egypt' and 'Aquarium' acrylic paintings, combined with aerosol art techniques, focus on realistic representation, with a view to decoding digital impression and reassemble errors into patterns and transitions into colors.

On one of outer walls of the stand, Chile-born Pablo Benzo's still life oil on linen, 'Terrace Alone', follows purist directives, focusing on human interaction represented as geometric angles and shapes, further emphasized through color. Alongside this, UK artist Ally Rosenberg envisioned a configuration of wall sculptures, comprising small, white ceramic tiles, green onyx/marble and painted, 3D, Jesmonite forms, related to the concept of a 'weed' as an ironic and solipsistic idea, speaking to human arrogance.

On the final exterior wall, Iran-born Amir Fallah's 'Silent Traveler' & 'Silent Sounds' at first glance may seem like regular stained-glass pieces but these are in fact about an exciting mix of traditional stained-glass with contemporary fused-glass techniques that fulfills the artist's essential affection for recontextualizing ancient and modern images, so as to explore the complexities of immigrant life in the US. In closing, Serbian Aleksandar Todorovic's emblematic egg tempera on wooden board works 'Saint Lizzie', 'Saint Queeneth', 'Saint Operah' and 'Saint ADS' read as a conceptually evolved critique on popular culture, introducing for the first time a series of female CEOs, making use of his distinctive sarcasm and a deceptive happy-go-lucky attitude.

Untitled Art, taking place during Miami Art Week from Tuesday November 29 through Saturday December 3, with a VIP Preview on Monday November 28, is the leading annual independent art fair on the sands of Miami Beach. With a view to supporting the wider art ecosystem, Untitled Art secures an inclusive and collaborative platform for discovering contemporary art by both emerging artists and historical figures, continually investing in new technologies in order to to make contemporary art collecting more accessible and amplify under-represented voices.
